Xilisoft ISO Maker is an easy-to-use tool that creates ISO images from a CD/DVD, which makes it possible to save the contents of your disc to a file for later use. Xilisoft ISO Maker creates ISO images of various CD/DVD formats, including CD-RW, DVD-RW, DVD+RW, DVD+R, and DVD+R DL discs. The utility allows you to determine the location of the ISO file, whether you want to create an ISO image file or an ISO image to a CD or DVD disc, and what post-processing actions to perform. Please be aware that we do not store any files in any way, and that we do not have any free hosting or download service, we just collect all the links in order to make it easier for you to download and find them. If you want to remove any link, send us an email and we will delete it immediately, thanks a lot.I get it. President Donald Trump is upset about the lack of respect he's been receiving lately from the press, and it was likely sparked by the news that The New York Times has been compiling a list of Trump's lies and his campaign's lies. For example, Trump has continued to tout the tariffs he imposed on China, though they have not had the desired effect, and he has argued that they should be extended. It seems obvious to me that Trump feels the tariffs and counter-tariffs with China are good for the US. That's not what the NYT is saying. Instead, their headline is "How Donald Trump's Liars Turned the Truth on Themselves," and it's based on the fact that Trump's initial tweets about the tariffs were wrong, and the government did not actually impose them. "Mr. Trump had to correct his initial tweets and his campaign's falsehoods, one by one, about the [tariffs]. 'I thought China was going to immediately hit us on [China's] 15% [tariff] because they did it to me,' Mr. Trump said, referring to the fact that China imposed retaliatory duties shortly after the announcement." Based on this example of Trump's "misinformation," what should the New York Times have done? Or, in other words, if the Times had been able to provide the president with a false
