Wednesday, January 11, 2007 Fractional Reserve The Fractional Reserve System defines the basis of banking. In the real world, in proportion to our monetary supply, there is only a very, very small amount of cash, bank deposits and secured debts with which we settle our accounts. Banks create their money by lending it to us at interest. The principal is borrowed, and the interest is paid (plus a profit) on the original principal, plus new principal. The term "Fractional Reserve" comes from the fact that banks in the U.S.C.A. can obtain funds with a fraction of the number of deposits in the vault. If you have $1,000,000 deposited and the bank lends out $100,000 and earns $10,000 a year on the total, the bank still only holds $900,000, the rest has vanished. When I wanted to get a mortgage loan for a house, I didn't have any way to prove to the lender that I could pay the loan back. So when they gave me a loan to buy my house, they were giving me a loan I couldn't repay. In fact, in current loan structure, they are taking a risk of loaning me money I can't repay. In the context of real estate, we are all taking out loans against other's property to purchase it.
